

Boyd Receives ISO 13485:2003 Certification for Medical Devices

September 8, 2014

Modesto, Calif. – September 8, 2014—Boyd Corporation, a global provider of precision-engineered, specialty material-based energy management and sealing solutions, today announced that its Modesto, California operation has achieved ISO 13485:2003 certification, an internationally recognized quality standard for medical devices.

Continues to Advance its Quality Management Systems

The ISO 13485:2003 certification enables consistent process inspection and evaluation, which drives adherence to medical device regulatory requirements and quality management.

“Boyd’s latest certification provides local and global medical customers a US-based option for precision converted medical solutions including design assistance, NPI as well as low, mid and high volume production. In addition to Modesto, Boyd’s ISO 13485:2003 certified facilities include Wuxi, China and Syke, Germany.

“Boyd’s commitment to achieving ISO 13485:2003 certification demonstrates our dedication to quality and continuous improvement, ensuring delivery of safe and effective medical products,” said Mitch Aiello, President & CEO of Boyd Corporation. “Throughout Boyd the importance of satisfying quality requirements as well as compliance to applicable regulation is paramount – we integrate appropriate quality checks and systems into every step of our value chain.”

The ISO 13485:2003 certifications at Boyd compliment its global footprint - further evolving existing quality and environmental management certifications including TS 16949, ISO 14001, AS 9100 and ISO 9001.
